The great port of Shanghai is the most completely Europeanized and Americanized city in all China. It is like a bustling Occidental metropolis dropped accidentally in the heart of the Asiatic Orient. As the traveller approaches the landing place he is struck by the splendid succession of tall fine structures that front upon the famous Bund or water front avenue. Motor cars and trolleys race past the rikshas and wheelbarrows of the Chinese. Traffic contrasts are noted at every turn. A visit to a Chinese home in the suburbs gives glimpses of celestial family life and customs.

Macao is another and quite different part of the China Coast. It is the oldest European settlement in China---founded by the Portugese and still held by Portugal as one of the few remaining fragments of her once vast possessions in the Far East. The leading industries appear to be fishing and Fantan---both being in certain senses gambling games.
